Over the past 12 months, progress on the building of the M3 motorway through Meath from Clonee to north of Carnaross has become more obvious to motorists and those using the existing roads network in the region of the motorway construction.

The M3 is the longest stretch of new road ever to be constructed in the history of the Irish State. The total scheme length is around 60 kilometres, and the project covers a total of 700 hectares of land across the county. Continues: Meath Chronicle
